The Arab and His Horse. The Arab, when he is a horseman, is a superb one, even though he does not come within our canons of the art, says a writer in Harper's. When the horse is only a means of transportation, or a beast of burden, the Arab is no better than his ilk elsewhere. When, as in the desert, the horse is his pet, his companion, his dream by day and night, the Arab is in a sense incomparable. No master can be more kind. No dog is more intelligent than the dark, liquid-eyed steed he has bred and trained, whose ancestor, a hundred generations back, his ancestors have loved and trusted. This horse will follow him day and night. He would fret out his soul at being hitched to a post, and his master would scorn to tie him. He will stand immovable in the midst of danger and fright which would make any civilized horse frantic. He will carry his master through fire and water. He will unflinchingly face wounds and death, so long as the hand which has fed him is placed upon his neck. He will stand over his disabled lord till help arrives or he will go alone to seek it. He will kneel for him to mount and he will bear him bravely home if he falls a sacrifice of his devotion at the door of his master's tent. These are not always fables. The horse, treated as he should be generation after generation, FOR SALE BY E.S. LEADBEATER & SONS | developes a rare intelligence and has as noble an affection as the dog.

The great delight of the Arab horseman is the fantasia. The entries con-tain all manner of horsemen, armed and unarmed, who ride more or less wild figures to more or less monotonous drumming music, and who end by the most excited and exciting potpourri of feat riding. They stand in their stirrups and throw their guns in the air, whirl them about in the most approved warlike style, and fire them at intervals in what seems an uncalled for and dangerous fashion. They rear, wheel, kick, buck, rush, step, turn and twist their horses like so many tum-blers, shouting meanwhile, yelling, screaming like so many devils. No picture can do justice to the keleidoscopic fervor and wildness of the scene if there are many riders engaged in it.

It is a seething whirlpool of wild, unmeaning, half-merry, half fanatical ex-citement, in which no end of excellent horsemanship comes to the fore. From time to time the riders stop and rank themselves for a rest on one side; then out come individuals to show what, sintheir steeds can do. They pironette and piaffer and dance, and then make a rush at full gallop to one or other side, stop suddenly, and wheel about. There is no specific art in what they do; each man has trained his horse on his own untrained ideas. They have a close seat, clinging with their heels, and exhibit a great deal of skill in their gyratory exercises; but once seen the fantasia losses its interest. All semi-wild nations do about the same tricks on horse-back. I think our Indian easily excels them all; while nothing I have ever seen in fantasies in the faintest degree approaches in delicacy and difficulty the fine work of JUST RECEIVED AND NOW ON SALE a school-trained horse in the hands of a master of the art.

A REVERSIBLE WATERFALL.—The most picturesque as well as the most direct from the makers and for sale at botstriking manifestation of the tidal rise tom prices by E. J. MILLER & SONS. and fall is at the mouth of the St. John river, at St. John, New Brunswick. Here may be witnessed on every tide a change of conditions as sudden and as complete as a quick change of scene in a drama; the beauty of the landscape, enhanced by the handiwork of man, adding greatly to the impressiveness of adding greatly to the impressiveness of the support of the landscape, and the support of the landscape, enhanced by the handiwork of man, adding greatly to the impressiveness of the support of the landscape. This is locally the phenomenon. This is locally known as the "reversible falls," although "reversible rapids" would be more appropriate. In a map of St. John and its environs, drawn in 1784 by more appropriate. In a map of St. John and its environs, drawn in 1784 by an officer of the St. John's loyalists, the matter is referred to in a marginal note as follows:

JAS. F. CARLIN & SONS,

note as follows:
"The falls in this river are justly ranked among the curiosities of the world; they are at the mouth of the river, about one mile from the entrance, Cherry, Currant, Vanilla, and Raspberry and are navigable four times in twentyfour hours, which commands great attention, as only a few minutes are required to pass in safety.

"The tide rising from twenty to twenty-four feet, at high water is six to eight feet higher than the river, which occasions a fall in the river as well as out, the whole water of the country having to pass between two rocks sixty yards distant." ricks GROUND RAW BONE (warranted nictly pure).
